

News
Spirituality

Marian Days participants watch Bishop Edward Rice of the Diocese of Springfield-Cape Girardeau celebrate the opening Mass of the festival in Carthage, Missouri, Aug. 4. The events, organized by the Congregation of the Mother of the Redeemer, a men's religious order from Vietnam that settled in Missouri in the 1970s, began in 1978. (Peter Tran)

by Peter Tran

View Author Profile

Join the Conversation

August 6, 2022

Share on FacebookShare on TwitterEmail to a friendPrint

CARTHAGE, MO. — Pham Thi Sang was elated to return to the Marian Days celebration in this town in south central Missouri after its cancellation for two years due to the COVID-19 pandemic. The 91-year-old Sang from Houston said she has made this pilgrimage more than 20 times. "When I am here I ask God for the wisdom to learn to live my faith and to love him."

Sang said she made a prayer of thanksgiving to God and to the Blessed Mother for the many blessings in her life after her husband died at age 34, leaving her with 10 children.

Not far from the main stage for the outdoor Mass, a group of Nghia Si (high schoolers) were walking, playing and laughing under the shade of maple trees. They are members of TNTT — Thieu Nhi Thanh The, or Vietnamese Eucharistic Youth Movement. Talking to Global Sisters Report, they said it was good to be back this year to "hang out," attend the witness rally, and participate in the praise and worship sessions. Although from all over the U.S., they could be identified with their "yellow scarf" as members of the same confraternity.

Fanning herself with a paper fan under the high 90-plus degree humidity, Sr. Ana Gonzales of the Dominican Sisters of Peace said, "This is my first time here at this gathering. It is such a religious and cultural enlightenment. Someone told me that this is the coolest thing as it is the closest experience you can ever have to being in Vietnam. Ones have to come down here to experience this — the prayerful atmosphere, the food, the devotion to the Blessed Mother."

Cape Girardeau to officially open the event.

Fr. Timothy Thang Tran, another member of the order, said that the event started in 1978, a few years after the 1975 fall of Saigon. Initially, the congregation wanted to organize this pilgrimage for evangelization. They expected only a few hundred people, but they were "pleasantly" surprised to see that more than 1,500 Vietnamese showed up. "We organized this as a religious event as a way to reach out to people to spread the Good News. After that it grew to something more."

Several women religious congregations were represented at the event. Here is the religious gift shop of Lovers of the Holy Cross. (Peter Tran)

Pham This Sang, 91, and her sister, Pham This Menh, 81, were resting in the air conditioned large hall for elderly people. Small beds were set up for people to rest. (Peter Tran)

Marian Days participants watch Bishop Edward Rice of the Diocese of Springfield-Cape Girardeau celebrate the opening Mass of the festival in Carthage, Missouri, Aug. 4.

Marian Days participants watch Bishop Edward Rice of the Diocese of Springfield-Cape Girardeau celebrate the opening Mass of the festival in Carthage, Missouri, Aug. 4.

Fr. Timothy Thang Tran of the Congregation of the Mother of the Redeemer stands at the Youth Rally venue. He is the public affairs official for the congregation's organizing committee. (Peter Tran)

Vietnamese and American food booths catered to the hungry crowds. (Peter Tran)

Vietnamese and American food booths catered to the hungry crowds. (Peter Tran)

Shops selling traditional “ao dai” dresses were popular. (Peter Tran)

A group of Nghia Si or high schoolers of the Vietnamese Eucharistic Youth Movement from Kansas City, Lincoln and Austin hangs out during Marian Days. They are, from left, Thien An Vu, Marian Pham, Sophia Doan, Xuan Nguyen, Elaine Ho, Anna Nguyen, Noah Cao and Vinh Le. (Peter Tran)

At least 30,000 people gathered in Carthage, Missouri, for the Marian Days festival, the first held since 2019 because of the COVID pandemic. The events are organized by the Congregation of the Mother of the Redeemer, a men's religious order from Vietnam that settled in Missouri in the 1970s. Marian Days started in 1978. (Peter Tran)

Before the pandemic, attendees numbered more than 70,000 in most years. This year the festival drew at least 30,000, with attendance curtailed because of COVID fears and high prices for food and gas, he said, noting the program has no registration system.

"The Marian procession is the highlight," he said. "A lot of people still come because they want to be connected with their roots, their faith and their culture."

The congregation has more than 50 acres, he said, which filled up fast with large tents that parishes from around the country used for attendees, with other sections for shops and food booths. Thang, the public affairs official for the event, helps with logistics for the tents, food stalls, gift and religious arts and crafts shops, booths for religious congregations, venues for catechism or workshops for young people and adults, and confessional stalls. He is also a contact person with Carthage city officials and the police department. "The people of Carthage are very hospitable and understanding," he said.

Advertisement

The Midwest location helps as "people come in from the East Coast and the West Coast," he said. "It is a way for people to come together, and especially when they escaped in 1975. This is where they could reconnect with their families and friends after being scattered or resettled throughout the county. It has a family aspect to it. In the 1980s we began to see crowds in the tens of thousands." He first came in 1991 while in high school.

Yen Tran from Brooklyn Park, Minnesota, said what drew her was gathering with family and friends to thank God and the Blessed Mother for her intercession. She believes that through Mary's intercession her husband recovered from his recent heart surgery.

Nguyen Duc Hien and his wife, Quy, said this was their first time at the event, although he'd heard about it for many years. They drove more than 20 hours from Allentown, Pennsylvania.

"I was a fallen-away Catholic for all my life. I grew up as Catholic, then went into the Navy, left the country to come here after the war and started a new life," he said. "I was busy with work and had no time for my faith." Hien, 69, said it is not too late to find a way to rekindle his faith life. "This pilgrimage is a first step to nurture my faith."

This story appears in the Marian Shrines and Devotions feature series. View the full series.